

International Executive Protection

The Client: In this case study example, PRS assisted a Fortune 500 high tech company based in the USA during business travel to Lagos, Nigeria during the fuel crisis in Western Africa.

The Situation: The client had 2 of their senior executives flying into Lagos, Nigeria in late May 2015 to attend several high-level business meetings around town in various locations and at various times throughout a 3-day period. The travelers were new to the region and unfamiliar with the surroundings and risks day-to-day in such logistics moving in & around the city.

The Solution: The local PRS private security services partner in Nigeria has vast resources and experience operating day-to-day in country. PRS deployed 1 security driver and 1 close protection officer (armed, concealed, plain-clothes) to escort the business travelers for the duration of their stay. The PRS EP team put together a travel management plan in advance of the travelers' arrivals and shared the plan with them via email to best prepare & familiarize the travelers with the EP team as well as rough expectations. The EP team met the travelers outside baggage claim at the airport, greeting them with a hand-held sign that was somewhat innocuous in name (actual names of individuals nor the company name were not utilized), and escorted them to their hotel and other meetings around town for the duration of their stay. The PRS partner has their own fuel storage cells that are private so the fuel shortage that was occurring in Nigeria at the time of their travel did not impact the business travelers schedule or routine. The travelers were returned to the airport without incident.

The Result: The client executives had productive meetings while visiting for business that were uninterrupted, on-time, reliable and professional allowing for the maximum efficiency of the use of their time.

“Alex and team were timeous, and flexible as the itinerary changed a lot due to the fuel crisis in Nigeria last week. I was also impressed that they were able to keep their vehicles going as they apparently had private fuel reserves at their premises. Thanks again for organising.”
